SF Transgender Film Festival returns for its 26th year

Five programs shown online and at the Roxie Theater highlight subjects' humanity

By Jeffrey M. Anderson
Special to The Examiner

Returning for its 26th year, the San Francisco Transgender Film Festival arrives at a time when understanding and empathy for trans people have perhaps increased — but so too has the persecution and discrimination against them, making the event all the more essential.

The festival — which launches in person on Nov. 8 at the Roxie Theater and online Nov. 11-19 — is dedicated to showcasing the humanity of the films' transgender and gender-nonconforming subjects.

Curated by Shawna Virago, whose day job is punk-rock singer-songwriter, the festival consists of 33 short films in five programs. The lineup is open to any and all trans and nonbinary experiences, from the tender to the perverse.

"Belonging: An Indian Trans Immigrant Story," directed by Amir Jaffer, tells the harrowing story of Anjali Rimi, a transgender woman who faced prejudice, scorn and even violence, both at home and in the U.S. But despite setback after setback, Rimi formed an organization

COURTESY THE PR CANVAS

Directed by Zé Kielwagen, Marcos Serafim and Stevens Siméon, "Masisi Wouj" is among the movies featured in the 2023 San Francisco Transgender Film Festival called Parivar ("family"), dedicated to "economic justice, trans unity & immigrant equity."

"Belonging" finds its most touching moments when it interviews Rimi's mother, who is still trying to understand her daughter's journey. The two women bring out a wrenching honesty in each other.

Aside from documentaries, the festival contains a multitude of genres, including animation, comedy, horror, coming-of-age, dance, experimental works, personal essays, music videos, and erotica.

Rae Dawn's "City Folk: The Ads" is the first of a comedy web series about two drag brothers (Vera Hannush and Bex Salas) barely able to scrape up rent in San Francisco's monumentally expensive housing market.
